Roger Foo

Professor of Medicine, National University of Singapore (NUS), Senior Consultant, National University Heart Centre, Singapore

Roger Foo is a Professor of Medicine at the National University of Singapore (NUS), and Senior Consultant lead for the Cardiac Genetics Clinic, National University Heart Centre. He is a graduate of the Medical School at NUS, and spent 20 years in UK and USA before returning to Singapore in 2013. His specialist training was undertaken at Kings College Hospital, London, and Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge. He was awarded the UK Wellcome Trust Fellowship to pursue post-doctoral research at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, New York, and returned to Cambridge as a British Heart Foundation Fellow and Consultant Physician, before eventually returning to Singapore. His lab was the first to publish an epigenomic map of the failing human heart in 2012. More recently, his lab has published an in-depth analysis of the cardiac chromatin 3D organisation, and also reported the discovery of a long noncoding RNA, called Singheart, which regulates key cardiac gene expression. The approach of the lab is to deep dive into the epigenome of the heart, using advanced technology including single cell transcriptomics and Crispr-genome editing to explore frontiers, in continuing aspirations to discover novel avenues for therapies or biomarkers. Roger is also a keen advocate for the application of genomics to the clinic. He leads the BMRC Rare Disease research programme, SUREkids. SUREkids has developed a clinical whole exome sequencing pipeline which is ready for clinical use in Singapore and regionally.
